- 1.1 Explain the effectiveness of the title of the article in relation to the writers' intentions and message. (3)
- 1.2 Why has poetry not been deemed an 'honourable' career to date? (2)
- 1.3 Explain the writer's attitude to the 'third culture'? Your answer must consider the diction and tone used in paragraph 8. (3)
- 1.4 Explain the connection between poetry and branding in paragraph 10. Whose interests are served in this relationship? (3)
- 1.5 How does the register used in paragraphs 10 and 11 contrast with the content of Instagram poetry? Quote to support your answer. (4)
- 1.6 How is the reader of poetry positioned in paragraph 12? Quote to support your answer. (3)
- 1.7 From the context of paragraph 12, what is the difference between the work of a 'poet' and that of a 'personality'? (2)
- 1.8 Explain the effectiveness of the compound sentence being placed in a paragraph on its own in paragraph 13. (2)
- 1.9 'Insta-poetry' is a neologism. Write a dictionary entry for this word. Include the following in your entry:
 - Part of speech
 - Definition – including an understanding of 'neologism'.
 - Etymology(3)

QUESTION 2 SUMMARY

Refer to TEXT 2 on page 11.

Write a summary using the information from the texts that could be used in an advertising campaign to raise awareness for the plight of informal recyclers or 'trolley-pushers' of Johannesburg.

- Your summary must be in the form of one paragraph, using no more than 90 words.
- Your language use must be accurate and in an appropriate register.
- Do not include the title in your word count.
- Provide an accurate word count at the end of the summary.
- Use your own words. 'Cutting and pasting' of information is not acceptable.

QUESTION 3 SEEN POETRY

10 MARKS

Refer to the poems Hadedah by Adam Schwartzman and Herb Garden by Stephen Gray and answer the questions that follow each poem.

Hadedah – Adam Schwartzman

The flower-bed predator sinks its picked beak like a piston, Spreads its legs like a suburban cowboy, places its weight and levers out of the ground. The big bird is related to the ibis and is exotic. It takes its place among things that we know, though they came without being named or naming,

without references, the visible inhabitants in their own space with ours in common. The most we have said is that they were omens and make a very loud, uncivilized noise, but they climb with imagination – above my house

they bank in flights and top the lopped horizon, slice fat clouds and dip away into the trough,
cut through jacaranda and succulence smells,

10

wood fire and anthracite smells and swipe the light from the East Rand gold towns. Mine heads wink like nuggets in dumps and streams, like steel fly eyes, wheels of fortune, the wheel, and they climb over people singing home in trains and other people talking softly saying Next year in Jerusalem, London, Sydney, over neon paradises, shebeen kingdoms, and corrugated churches on earth. They level out,

15

leave behind the thatch and bougainvillaea,

slasto, rosaries, private Edens that were not always good,
but always there, over dunes, rivers, mountains, lakes, jungles, ancestral homes, the unmarked graves of sleeping cultures, until, when no one can see, they catch a warm thermal to ride on and upwards and out of the world.

25

- 3.1 How is the hadedah described in stanza 1 that supports the idea that the bird is 'exotic' (line 4). (2)
- 3.2 Explain the effectiveness of the use of enjambment in the poem. Quote an example from the poem to support your answer. (2)
- 3.3 How does the diction used in stanza 4 contribute to the tone of the stanza? (2)

The Herb Garden – Stephen Gray

My mother before she died insisted
I should have a herb garden
Something in her English soul
Amid rough South Africans Called for the tenderness of mint
The old scent of lavender and sage

5

They arrived in soggy pages of The Star
With a spade taller than herself
She dug them into my backyard
Before I was ready for them
A cigarette tightly in her lips
Explaining chives made life worthwhile

10

That is how she died in her own Garden of sweet remembrance
Very frail then with a bucket and spade
The size we children used for play
Always finding the sun too hot the soil
Far too dry for the gentler herbs

15

Today after the heart-stopping drought
My mother's bed of lost spices
Has so flourished I have cut it back
And the mint is in the crevices of fingers
The sage under my very nails
And I remember her every gesture.

20

- 3.4 With reference to both poems, discuss the role that nature plays in uniting South Africans. Quote to support your answer. (4)

QUESTION 4 UNSEEN POETRY

10 MARKS

Refer to the poems Refugee mother and child by Chinua Achebe and Da Same, Da Same by Sipho Sepamla and answer the questions that follow each poem.

Refugee mother and child – Chinua Achebe

No Madonna and Child could touch that picture of a mother's tenderness for a son she soon would have to forget.

The air was heavy with odours of diarrhoea of unwashed children with washed-out ribs and dried-up bottoms struggling in laboured steps behind blown empty bellies. Most 5

mothers there had long ceased to care but not this one; she held a ghost smile between her teeth and in her eyes the ghost of a mother's pride as she combed the rust-coloured hair left on his skull and then – 10

singing in her eyes – began carefully to part it... In another life this would have been a little daily act of no consequence before his breakfast and school; now she did it like putting flowers on a tiny grave.

15

20

- 4.1 Chinua Achebe has used graphic imagery in this poem. Choose one image and explain how the image contributes to the mood of the poem. (2)
- 4.2 Identify the figure of speech in line and 1 and explain its effectiveness. (3)

Da Same, Da Same – Sipho Sepamla

I doesn't care of you black
I doesn't care of you white
I doesn't care of you India
I doesn't care if you clearlink
if sometimes you Saus Afrika somewheres in yourselves because why
for sure you doesn't look anader man in da eye

I mean for sure now.
all da peoples is made like God.
sometimes you wanna knows how I meaning for is simples
da God I knows for sure
He make avarybudy wit' one heart.

- 4.3 Consider the image above as well as both poems, Refugee mother and child and the extract from Da Same, Da Same. Which poem do you believe to be a more effective example of social protest? How does the visual add to the effectiveness of the poem you have chosen? Your answer must refer to both poems as well as the visual. (5)

QUESTION 5 VISUAL LITERACY

20 MARKS

Refer to TEXTS 3 – 8 on pages 12-14 and answer the questions that follow.

Refer to TEXT 3

- 5.1 How is the bank positioned in relation to the customer in Text 3? Refer to the use of diction in your answer? (2)
- 5.2 Explain the irony of the slogan for Zenith Bank in Text 3. (2)

Refer to TEXT 4

- 5.3 How does the advertiser's use of pronouns in Text 4 enhance his/her intention? (2)

Read Extract 1 and answer the questions that follow in relation to the extract, TEXTS 4 and 5.

EXTRACT 1

ABSA recently relaunched a new brand identity with a new word called Africanicity. Their advertising was launched with punchy visuals using face paint, and neon colours, and burning TVs.

But Nando's are calling them out for their African-Nasti.

Over the years, Nando's has not only given us delicious PERi-PERi flame-grilled chicken, but food for thought via their adverts, campaigns and social commentary, with the latest one questioning the surplus of "Afro-futurism" on our screens at the moment.

Their most recent ad promoting their Half Chicken with any single side was released on Monday, 3 September 2018.

"Nando's has always celebrated everything uniquely South African, both loveable and challenging! We love to fire-up conversations and believe that talking about the current hyperbolic portrayal of African-ness is one such growing conversation. The diversity and beauty of Africa should be rightly celebrated however the portrayals in recent advertising are often bizarrely over the top and seemingly the same between brands and categories" explains Doug Place, Chief Marketing Officer for Nando's South Africa.

In response to Nando's advert, Absa replied which caused Capitec and Nedbank to weigh in on the debate and add further commentary.

- 5.4 Explain the meaning of the term 'Africanicity' from the context of Text 4. (2)
- 5.5 Considering Extract 1, how has Nando's used 'Africanicity' as a pun to criticise the Absa campaign? (2)

- 5.6 Explain how the Nando's advert, Text 5, could be considered satirical? (2)

Refer to TEXTS 4, 6, 7 and 8.

- 5.7 Competitive advertising is not permitted in South Africa. However, social media has given companies a platform to criticize others often to humorous effect. Account for the differences in appeal of the three banks in Texts 4,7 and 8. Your answer must consider tone and diction. (5)
- 5.8 To what extent do you believe emojis aid the delivery of the message in Texts 6, 7 and 8? (3)

QUESTION 6 TEXTUAL EDITING

10 MARKS

Refer to TEXT 9 on page 15 and answer the questions that follow.

- 6.1 Provide a synonym for the word 'awry' in line 2. (1)
- 6.2 What is the function of the colon in line 5? (1)
- 6.3 "For perhaps centuries to come, an exclusion zone, set up around the plant following the forced evacuation of tens of thousands of area residents, will be off limits to human habitation."
- 6.3.1 Explain the impact of starting the sentence above with the subordinate clause. (2)
- 6.4 "BP has since shelled out tens of billions of dollars in cleanup costs, fines and legal settlements."
- 6.4.1 Identify the punctuation error in this sentence. (1)
- 6.4.2 Rewrite this sentence in the passive voice. (1)
- 6.4.3 Which sentence, the active or the passive would have a greater impact on the reader? Provide a reason for your answer. (2)
- 6.5 Both paragraphs use sensational (emotive) language. Judge whether this is an effective technique in conveying the writer's intention. Quote to support your answer. (2)

How Instagram Saved Poetry

Social media is turning an art form into an industry

By Faith Hill and Karen Yuan

1. Tom spent his days as a clerk, two floors below ground level in the cellars of Lloyds Bank. He worked in the foreign-transactions department from 9:15 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. each day, and in his free moments between filing and tabulating balance sheets, he wrote.
2. Tom was better known to the world as T. S. Eliot. By the time he started as a clerk in 1917, his most popular poems—The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock and The Waste Land—had been published to great acclaim. But even then, despite his bank salary, the man who has often been called the greatest poet of the 20th century struggled to make ends meet. He accepted money from relatives to buy underwear and pajamas, and anxiety over his finances drove him to breakdowns.
3. Poetry has always been an art form, but it has rarely been a career even for the most legendary poets. William Carlos Williams was a doctor. Wallace Stevens was an insurance executive. The poet's story has long been one of a double life, split between two urgent duties: making a living and making art.
4. Rupi Kaur is a case study in how dramatically the world of poetry has changed since then. The 25-year-old Canadian poet outsold Homer two years ago: Her first collection, milk & honey, has been translated into 40 languages and has sold 3.5 million copies, stealing the position of best-selling poetry book from The Odyssey.
5. It wasn't always like this for Kaur. She started her career by posting her work to Tumblr in 2012 and then gradually switched to Instagram, but her social-media strategy wasn't yet making her nearly enough money to live. "My mind-set was: No way can poetry pay your rent," she told us. Then milk & honey was published in 2014 and hit the New York Times best-seller list in 2016. Kaur realized, "It's not stopping. It's getting bigger. Maybe this can sustain me." Her success doesn't seem to be slowing. Within the past year, she appeared on Jimmy Fallon, made the Forbes 30 under 30 list, and sold out a "World Tour de Force" across India and the U.K. Kaur now has 3 million Instagram followers.
6. Since the publication of milk & honey, the poetry genre has become one of the fastest-growing categories in book publishing. According to one market-research group, 12 of the top 20 best-selling poets last year were Insta-poets, who combined their written work with shareable posts for social media; nearly half of poetry books sold in the United States last year were written by these poets. Kaur's publisher, Kirsty Melville, has seen it happen firsthand: "It used to be that poetry was down in the back of the store next to the bathrooms, and now it's out front," she told us.
7. In 2010, the editor of n+1 magazine, Chad Harbach, famously wrote that there were two distinct and rival literary cultures in America: the institutional, university-driven MFA track, and the New York-centered publishing world. But now there is a third option: the fast-paced, democratizing, hyper-connected culture of the internet. The poets of this third category often have little formal training, and their publishers are strewn across the country. Social media seems to have cracked the walls around a field that has long been seen as high-brow, exclusive, esoteric, and ruled by tradition, opening it up for young poets with broad appeal, many of whom are women and people of color.

8. Social-media poets, using Instagram as a marketing tool, are not just artists—they're entrepreneurs. They still primarily earn money through publication and live events, but sharing their work on Instagram is now what opens up the possibility for both.
9. The ever-growing popularity of these poets also makes them valuable to other brands, providing newer and bigger ways to commodify their words. Cleo Wade's poetry has been featured in Gucci advertisements, emblazoned on Nike sneakers, and scrawled across dishes sold by boutique homeware stores. During last February's New York Fashion Week, the designer Tracy Reese had models strut to poetry readings on the catwalk.
10. Perhaps this was inevitable with the nature of quick consumption on Instagram, where you can come across a pithy statement, double-tap the square it's in, and reflexively scroll past it all in a matter of seconds; the pithier the statement, the better. The limited confines of an Instagram post incentivize the bite-sized lyric, the tidy aphorism, the briefly deliverable quote. Most Instagram poems advise how to live a better life—how to move on from a broken heart, how to believe in one's self, how to pursue one's dreams. On a platform full of idealized lifestyles in food, travel, and fashion, poetry presents yet more aspirational philosophies.
11. Earlier this year, in a divisive, scorched-earth essay, the poet Rebecca Watts criticized the popular Instagram poet Hollie McNish's work as that not of a poet, "but of a personality." She derided Instagram poetry as amateurish and craftless commercial fodder that anyone can breezily snack on. "Artless poetry sells," she wrote. "The reader is dead: Long live consumer-driven content and the 'instant gratification' this affords."
12. But poetry, like any other art, must adapt to the world changing around it.
13. Poetry, in particular, is often imagined as existing in a vacuum, dashed off on parchment by a reclusive writer shut in to ponder at all hours the eternal truths and greatest mysteries of our existence. But in fact, poetry has always been affected by shifting technologies.
14. It's impossible to predict, while the first Instagram poets are still at work, how radically the industry is being changed by social media and whether the transformations will be lasting. But the triumphs of poets like Rupi Kaur—the world tours, the book sales, the frenzy of fans—are undeniable. The word poetry originates from the Greek word poesis, which means the process of creation, of composition, of production. From the very beginning, the art was tied to the labor. Now, because of a movement of rookie poets on the internet, it is reaping its rewards.

TEXT 2Informal Recyclers: Changing Space, Changing City*By Wits University Press • 21 October 2018

On any weekday in any street in Johannesburg one might encounter a lean, bowed person straining to pull a vast load up a hill, round a bend or across a busy traffic intersection, cramping to the side of the road out of the way of impatient cars and trucks, or pausing to lean on the trolley handles to catch breath.

Bulky brown hessian bags squatting on flat platform trolleys are stuffed with cardboard or paper, metal or plastic, making their trundling way by human muscle power alone to a recycling depot where their contents can be exchanged for cash.

Daily the waste discarded by businesses and residents of Johannesburg is actively salvaged in the transition between private property and public landfill.

In the dark early hours, empty trolleys rumble briskly from central areas to the suburbs scheduled for City refuse removal service that day. The journey out can be many kilometres and several hours of walking. Reclaimers must arrive at bursting wheelie bins before the Pikitup trucks do, before the formal recycling companies collect their hauls, before competitors arrive with trolleys hungry for loading.

Bins and bags are systematically trawled for particular goods: white A4 paper perhaps, PET plastics or scrap metal. When hessian bags are full enough to make the long journey back worthwhile – today, or perhaps only tomorrow, after another suburb is scoured – the back-breaking journey to the depot begins.

Recyclers operate in in-between places and spaces. They are self-employed, without wages, job protection, insurances or medical aid. Their strenuous manual labour, eye for the cash value in rubbish, diversion of material from landfills, and low carbon footprints are not applauded. City residents and businesses generating waste are mostly ambivalent – occasionally recognising and facilitating the reclaiming process on their doorstep, sometimes complaining about and chasing away ‘dirty vagrants’, but mostly ignoring their fellow residents and road users. City authorities, too, mostly overlook recyclers – indeed, appear blind to their existence and their labour.

A different response, however, is provoked by the gathering points for sorting and storing accumulated materials, and the recyclers’ nightly sleeping arrangements. These attract harsh rebuke from law enforcement officers.

This then is the ambiguous world of the informal recycler or reclainer in Johannesburg. Interviewed in Newtown in 2010, Sizwe and Danny’s stories reflect this complexity. Sizwe and Danny trawl Rosebank on Mondays, Westcliff on Wednesdays, Northcliff and Cresta on Thursdays, Booysens on Fridays, selling their stock to a depot in Newtown.

In addition to these working ranges, Sizwe and Danny divide their living time between Newtown and Evaton West, some 40 km to the south-west of central Johannesburg, in the neighbouring municipality of Emfuleni. Living conditions in the two places contrast sharply: both men own small, formal, government-sponsored ‘RDP’ houses in Evaton West, acquired between 1995 and 1997.

The houses are permanently occupied by spouses and children. Sizwe and Danny join their families for the weekend on Friday nights and Saturday afternoons respectively. During the week, however, they sleep rough, on leftover public space under a freeway bridge in central Johannesburg.

By contrast, their homes in Evaton West, although cramped and of poor physical quality, have electricity and flush toilets. They represent, too, a form of security and stability: “I have my own place... And I own at least the soil...”

But what Evaton West doesn’t offer them is a way of earning an adequate income. Sizwe and Danny speak of extensive poverty and unemployment in the area: “People are not working.”

Meet the new us.
An Absa inspired by Africa.

When the time came to re-imagine Absa, we looked to people and the African continent for inspiration. Our new colour palette is inspired by the rich and varied colours of this continent's earth and skies. Our new logo is inspired by our sense of community, and our infinite possibilities. Driving it all, is the way we get things done. We call this Africanacity.

Two of the worst environmental disasters in history.

Jesse Greenspan

<https://www.history.com/news/7-deadly-environmental-disasters>

Chernobyl

On April 26, 1986, a turbine test on one of the reactors at the Chernobyl nuclear power station went horribly awry, leading to a series of explosions that spewed massive amounts of radioactive material into the atmosphere. The accident, which the Soviet authorities attempted to cover up, initially claimed only 31 lives: two plant workers who died in the blasts, a third who reportedly keeled over of a heart attack and 28 first responders who contracted acute radiation syndrome during the frantic early stages of the cleanup. However, Chernobyl also unleashed a thyroid cancer epidemic and likely caused additional cancer cases as well. In 2005, a United Nations-backed panel calculated the eventual death toll at up to 4,000, whereas other organizations put this number significantly higher. For perhaps centuries to come, an exclusion zone, set up around the plant following the forced evacuation of tens of thousands of area residents, will be off limits to human habitation.

BP Oil Spill

On April 20, 2010, the Deepwater Horizon oil rig, located far out in the Gulf of Mexico, exploded into flames, killing 11 workers and injuring several others. The rig, owned by offshore drilling contractor Transocean and under lease to oil giant BP, then sank two days later, causing a petroleum leak that would gush out of control for nearly three months. According to the U.S. government, around 4.2 million barrels of oil ultimately escaped, contaminating at least 43,300 square miles of ocean and 1,300 miles of shoreline from Texas to Florida. Considered the largest accidental marine oil spill in history, it temporarily decimated the Gulf's fishing and tourism industries and killed thousands of birds, sea turtles and dolphins. BP has since shelled out tens of billions of dollars in cleanup costs, fines and legal settlements.
